The company has offices in Australia, the U.S. and Canada, including a recently-opened franchise in Edmonton, Alberta, with further plans to expand across Canada and other international markets.

CUTTING THE COSTS OF WORKPLACE CONFLICT

In this issue...

With every edition of our newsletter, we thrive to accomplish these goals: giving some meaningful resources to our valued clients, business partners and those considering our services; as well as updating you as to what we have been doing. Why? So that you feel confident in using our services. All our products capture the wide expertise of our internationally recognized team. That means we are in the market, constantly learning, teaching and collecting resources.

This issue provides you with information on Respectful Workplace, Emotions in the Workplace and Workplace Violence. Also attached is a graphic representation of the symptoms of workplace conflict, which allows you to identify where your organization fits on the Workplace Conflict Ladder.

I hope that you find the information useful, and please let us know if you would like anything specifically addressed in the newsletter for your own resource.

Best wishes,

Judy Brooks

PRI was featured in editorial in the following publications:

OUTthere (Issue 32, 2007): An in-flight magazine by the Rex Group of Australia. Our article, "Looking for a Fight?" outlines indicators of conflict and the common causes.

Sounding Board (Jan., 2007): The official publication of The Vancouver Board of Trade. Our article, "Training for Conflict Resolution Crucial for Executives," suggests that the quality of workplace relationships is key to organizational success.

Sounding Board (Mar., 2007): Our article, "Conflict-related Training: The Hazard of Panic Buying," stresses importance in realistically assessing needs to the real problems.

We were also mentioned in:

AFR Boss (Feb., 2007): An Australian financial review magazine. See article, "Is There Any Way to Avoid Office Politics?"

In the last quarter, we advertised in the following magazines:

Business in Calgary (Jan., Feb. & Mar. Issues): Published monthly, Business in Calgary is dedicated to improving Calgary's business community.

HR Monthly (Feb. & Apr. Issues): Published monthly, HR Monthly is Australia's most respected HR magazine.

Network (Winter & Spring Issues): Published four times a year, Network is the official publication of the Human Resources Institute of Alberta (HRIA).

PeopleTalk (Spring Issue): Published four times a year, PeopleTalk is British Columbia's largest HR Publication.

Sounding Board (Jan. & Mar. Issues): Published monthly, Sounding Board is the official publication of The Vancouver Board of Trade.

WorkSafe (Jan./Feb. Issue): Published bi-monthly, WorkSafe is the WorkSafeBC (Workers' Compensation Board of BC) prevention magazine on occupational health and safety issues.

WHO COMMITS WORKPLACE VIOLENCE & WHY?

There are four major groups of people who commit violence in the workplace: strangers; clients; co-workers; and the family members of co-workers. These groups tend to commit violence for very different reasons and in very different contexts.

Strangers who commit workplace violence most often do so for profit, that is, for money. A common scenario is robbery of a retail outlet for cash. Rarely, a stranger suffering from emotional or mental problems may come into a workplace and commit violence.

When clients act violently, it's often the result of a serious work-related conflict. This group also includes customers, patients, vendors, and business associates. At other times, people whose decisions are confused by physical or mental illness, usually patients in a clinic or care facility may be violent.

Violence committed by co-workers also is associated most commonly with serious conflict. But it may also occur when two co-workers are involved in an intimate relationship that turns sour or when one employee becomes romantically or sexually obsessed with another. The co-workers may be regular employees, temporary or contract workers, or former employees.

When family members of co-workers are involved, it usually involves intimate relationship violence that spills over into the workplace. Most often, the family member is the husband of an employee.

THE 7 BASIC HINTS TO RESPECTFUL WORKPLACE

A respectful workplace is one in which you and other employees each feel safe and secure with respect to:

Accessibility and Diversity: The workplace welcomes people similar to you and different from you.

Acceptance: The workplace values you for what you bring, and not what you are.

Accommodation: The workplace takes reasonable steps to recognize your individual needs and help you do your job well.

Clear expectations: There are clear expectations as to how we treat each other in the workplace.

Effective communication: We communicate in a healthy and effective manner in the workplace.

Effective conflict transformation and dispute resolution: The workplace makes available a variety of processes for resolving disagreements and transforming conflicts.

Active improvements: Everyone plays a role in continually trying to improve the workplace. In other words, you feel safe and secure when you are treated fairly and you see others being treated fairly.

EFFECTIVE LEADERS' SECRET: DEALING WITH EMOTIONS

You can't afford to ignore the impact of emotions at work. In most jobs, overall performance depends as much on our ability to get along well with others as it does on our specific technical abilities. Getting along well with others requires good communication skills – and so much of what and how we communicate is emotional in nature!

Some people seem to deal with emotions particularly well. They are skilled at being aware of their own feelings and sensitive to the moods of others. They are also respectful in how they express their own emotions and respond to other's emotions. Some scientists refer to these skills as "emotional intelligence." Emotional intelligence seems to help people to cope better with ordinary life stresses, without being overwhelmed by daily hassles. It also appears to help people maintain good relationships with family, friends, and co-workers, and even to make a good impression on strangers. For these reasons, emotional intelligence may be a critical skill for effective leadership.

The good news is, you can develop your emotional intelligence – just like you can develop any other intellectual skill or ability.

MEET ALICIA !

Meet Alicia !

Let's meet Alicia Watt, the friendly voice we all hear when we call the Vancouver headquarters.

What inspires you?

I am inspired most by other people and watching their ability to accomplish what they love.

What was your best decision?

Deciding to leave home to start my own life with choices I make independently.

What do you spend most of your time doing?

I am a TV addict so I spend much time watching TV shows. But I have valuable friends & two lovely cats who I spend plenty of time with.

What lesson would you most like the world to learn?

Everyone needs to learn "honesty, compassion, accountability and awareness." I believe these are staples for human survival.

Meet Alicia !

Favourite book?

I highly recommend these two books: "The Prophet and the Little Prince" & "Enders Game and the Gunslinger Series."
I am also looking forward to reading "Running with Scissors: A Memoir," which was an amazing movie.
